

English Language: Writing a Review Teaching Ideas

Learning Objective:

To use the features of review writing in my work.

Success Criteria:

- To identify modal verbs and understand how they are used.
- To understand how to use review-specific techniques in my work.
- To create a review using my knowledge of review writing features.

Context

Building on their knowledge from lesson one, students write their own reviews, focusing on modal verbs and persuasive language features.

Resources

Highlighters
Individual whiteboards and pens

Starter

Students should begin by drawing a scale in their books with 'least certain' at one end and 'most certain' at the other. They should then order the modal verbs from the PowerPoint slide in order of strength.

Main Activities

Modal Verbs

Students should read the example review. This has been differentiated by task depending on ability. They should identify the modal verbs and consider what effect they have.

A class discussion should be encouraged to talk about what effect using modal verbs have in reviews. This will encourage students to use modal verbs in their own reviews later in the lesson.

Fun Puns

Using individual whiteboards, students should attempt to write their own puns for films of their choice after seeing the explanation and examples on the PowerPoint. This can be completed in pairs depending on ability/creativity.

Meaningful Metaphors (optional depending on ability)

Using individual whiteboards, students should attempt to write their own metaphors that could be used for films of their choice after seeing the explanation and examples on the PowerPoint. This can be completed in pairs depending on ability/creativity.

Entertaining Extras (optional depending on ability)

Using individual whiteboards, students should attempt to write their own embedded clauses using the examples on the PowerPoint. This can be completed in pairs depending on ability/creativity.

Apply Your Knowledge

Students should attempt to write their own review about a film of their choice. They can use the Review Knowledge Organiser to help them and the plan that is provided. For lower ability groups, just a paragraph could be produced, while higher ability students can aim to write a full review dependent on time.

Plenary

Checkpoint: Peer Assessment

Students should swap their work with someone sitting near to them or next to them.

They should highlight and label where features of a review have been used so far in the work. They should also set a target for the student to add to their work.

Students can then respond to the feedback immediately and add further details to their work.

Moving On

End Point: Self-Assessment

Students should use the Review Knowledge Organiser to check their work. They should highlight the features from the organiser that they have used in their own work.
